Artist Statement

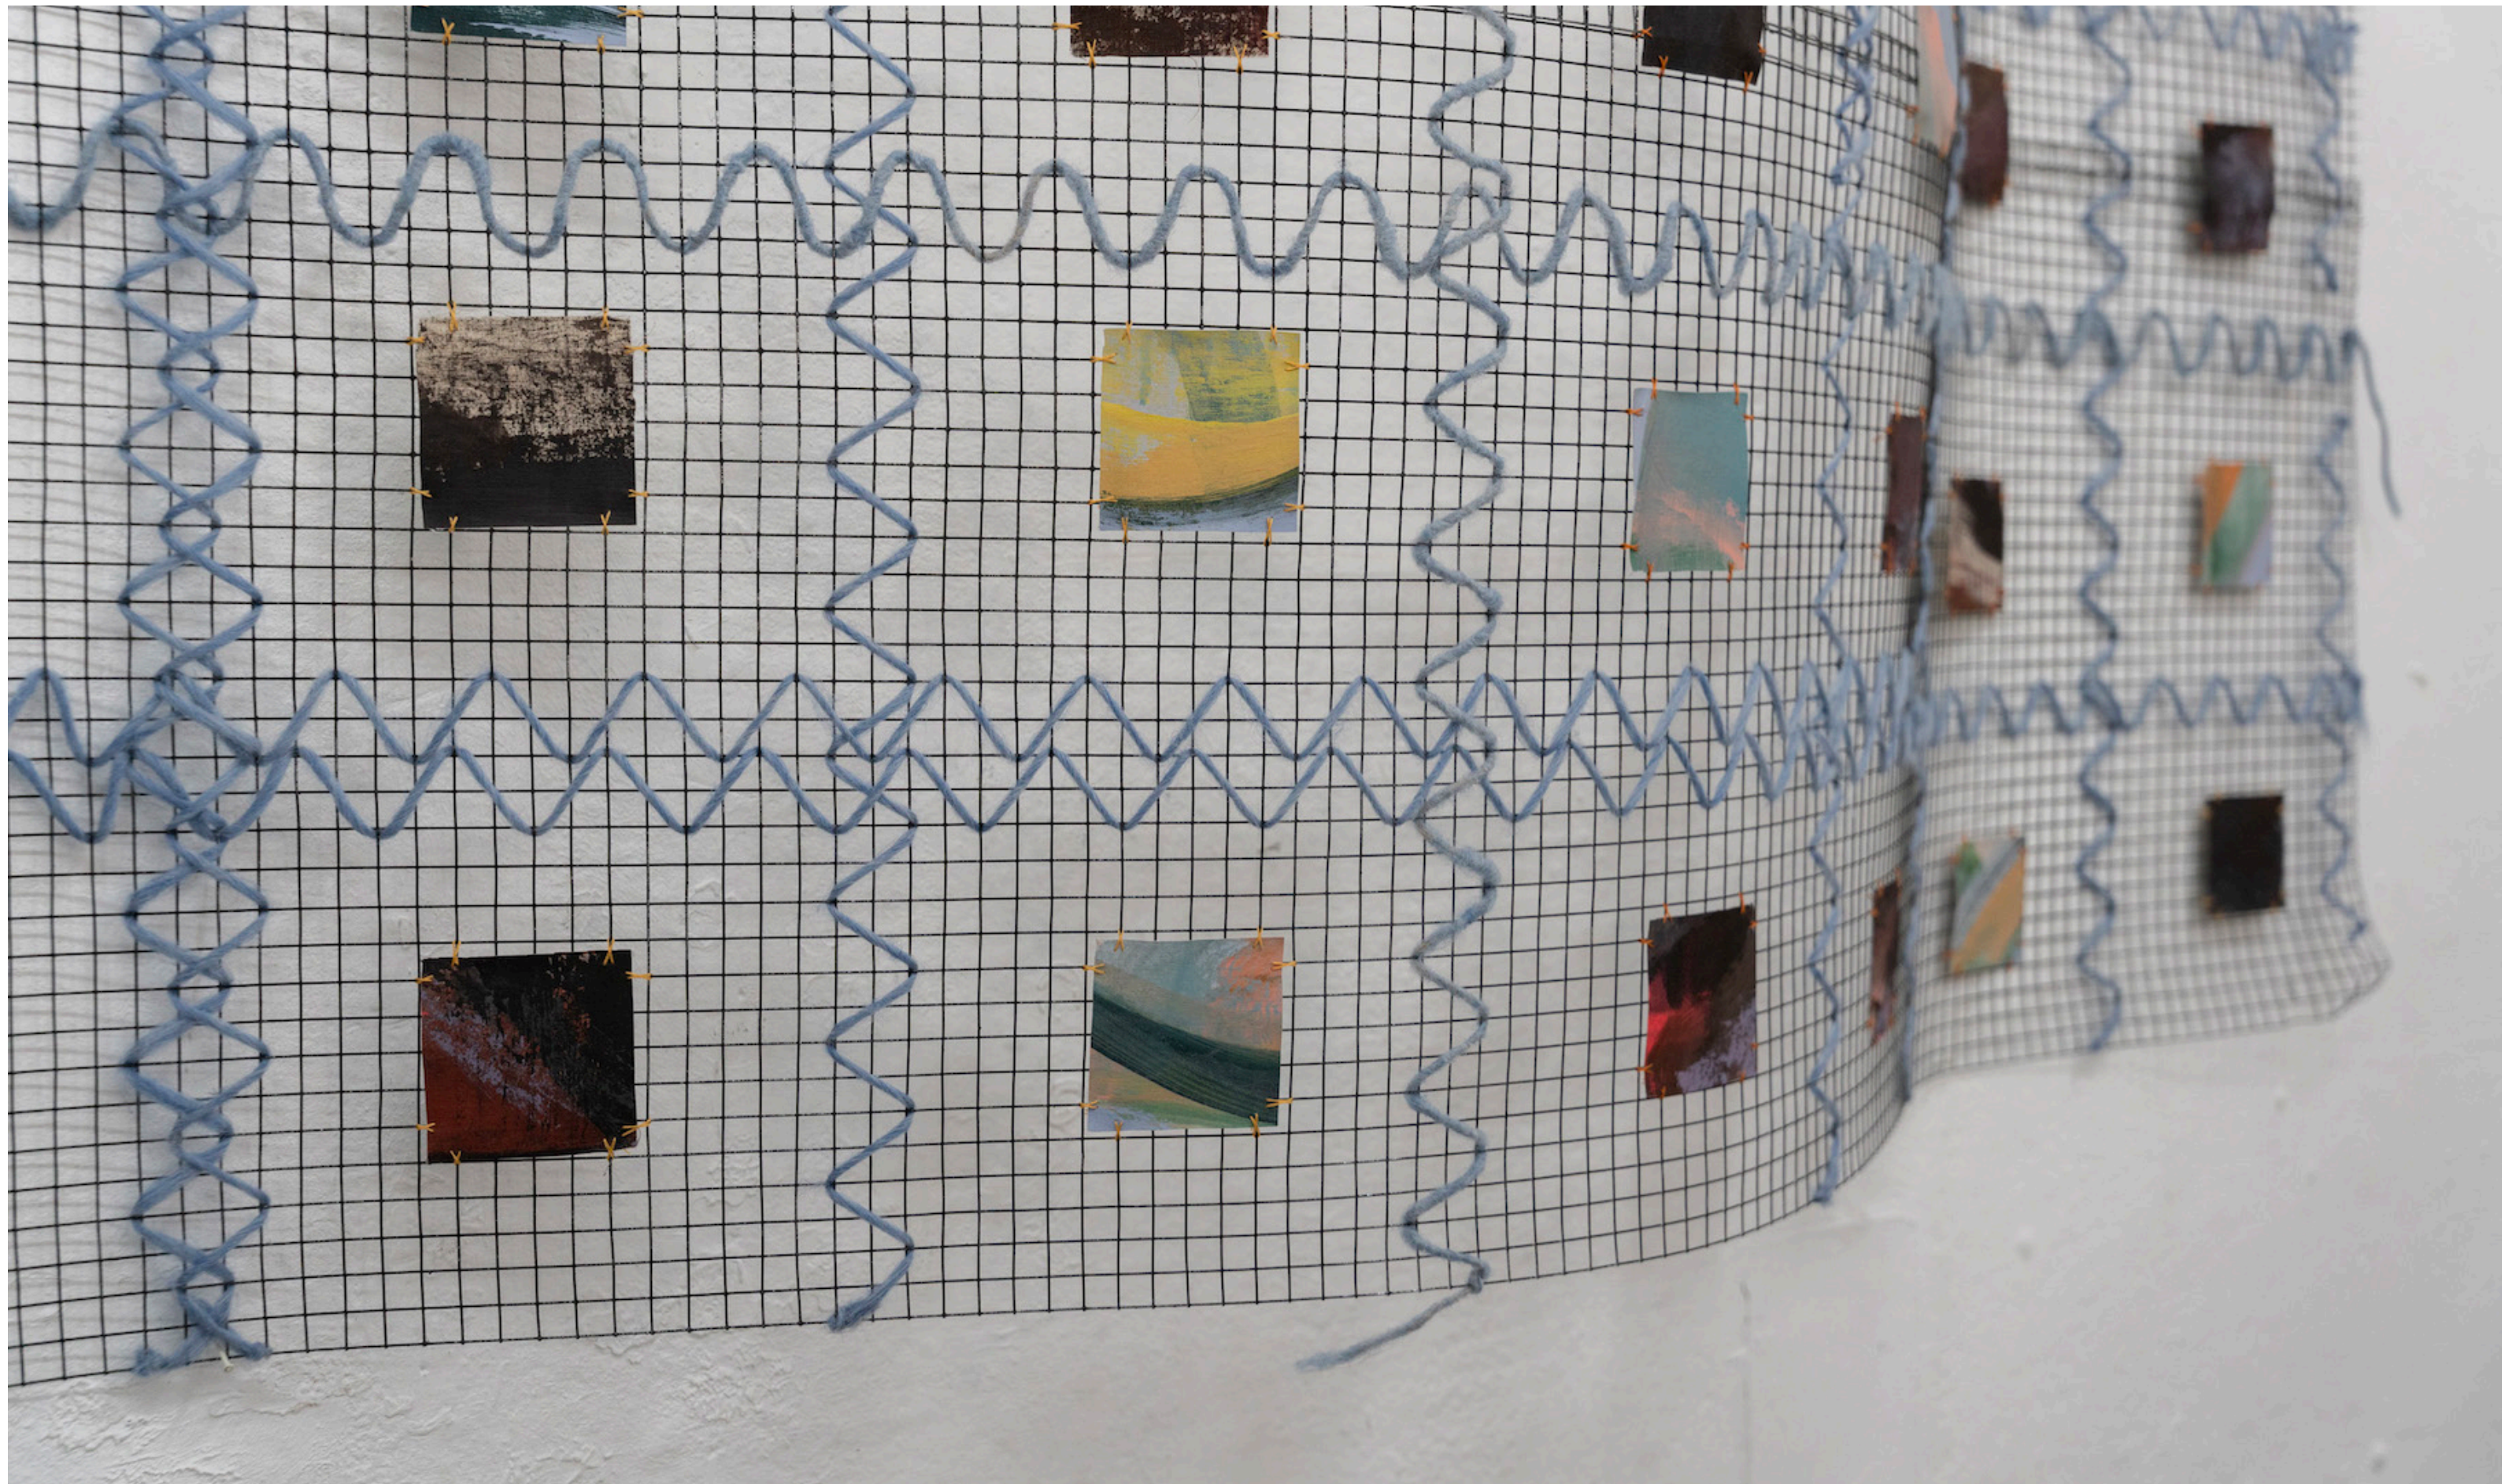

Bryn McConnell is a textile artist whose practice involves weaving and sewing contemporary materials into abstract collages. Her work explores patterning and storytelling with repetitive and meticulous construction methods. Bryn holds a degree in architecture from Tulane University, which informs her approach to creating art.

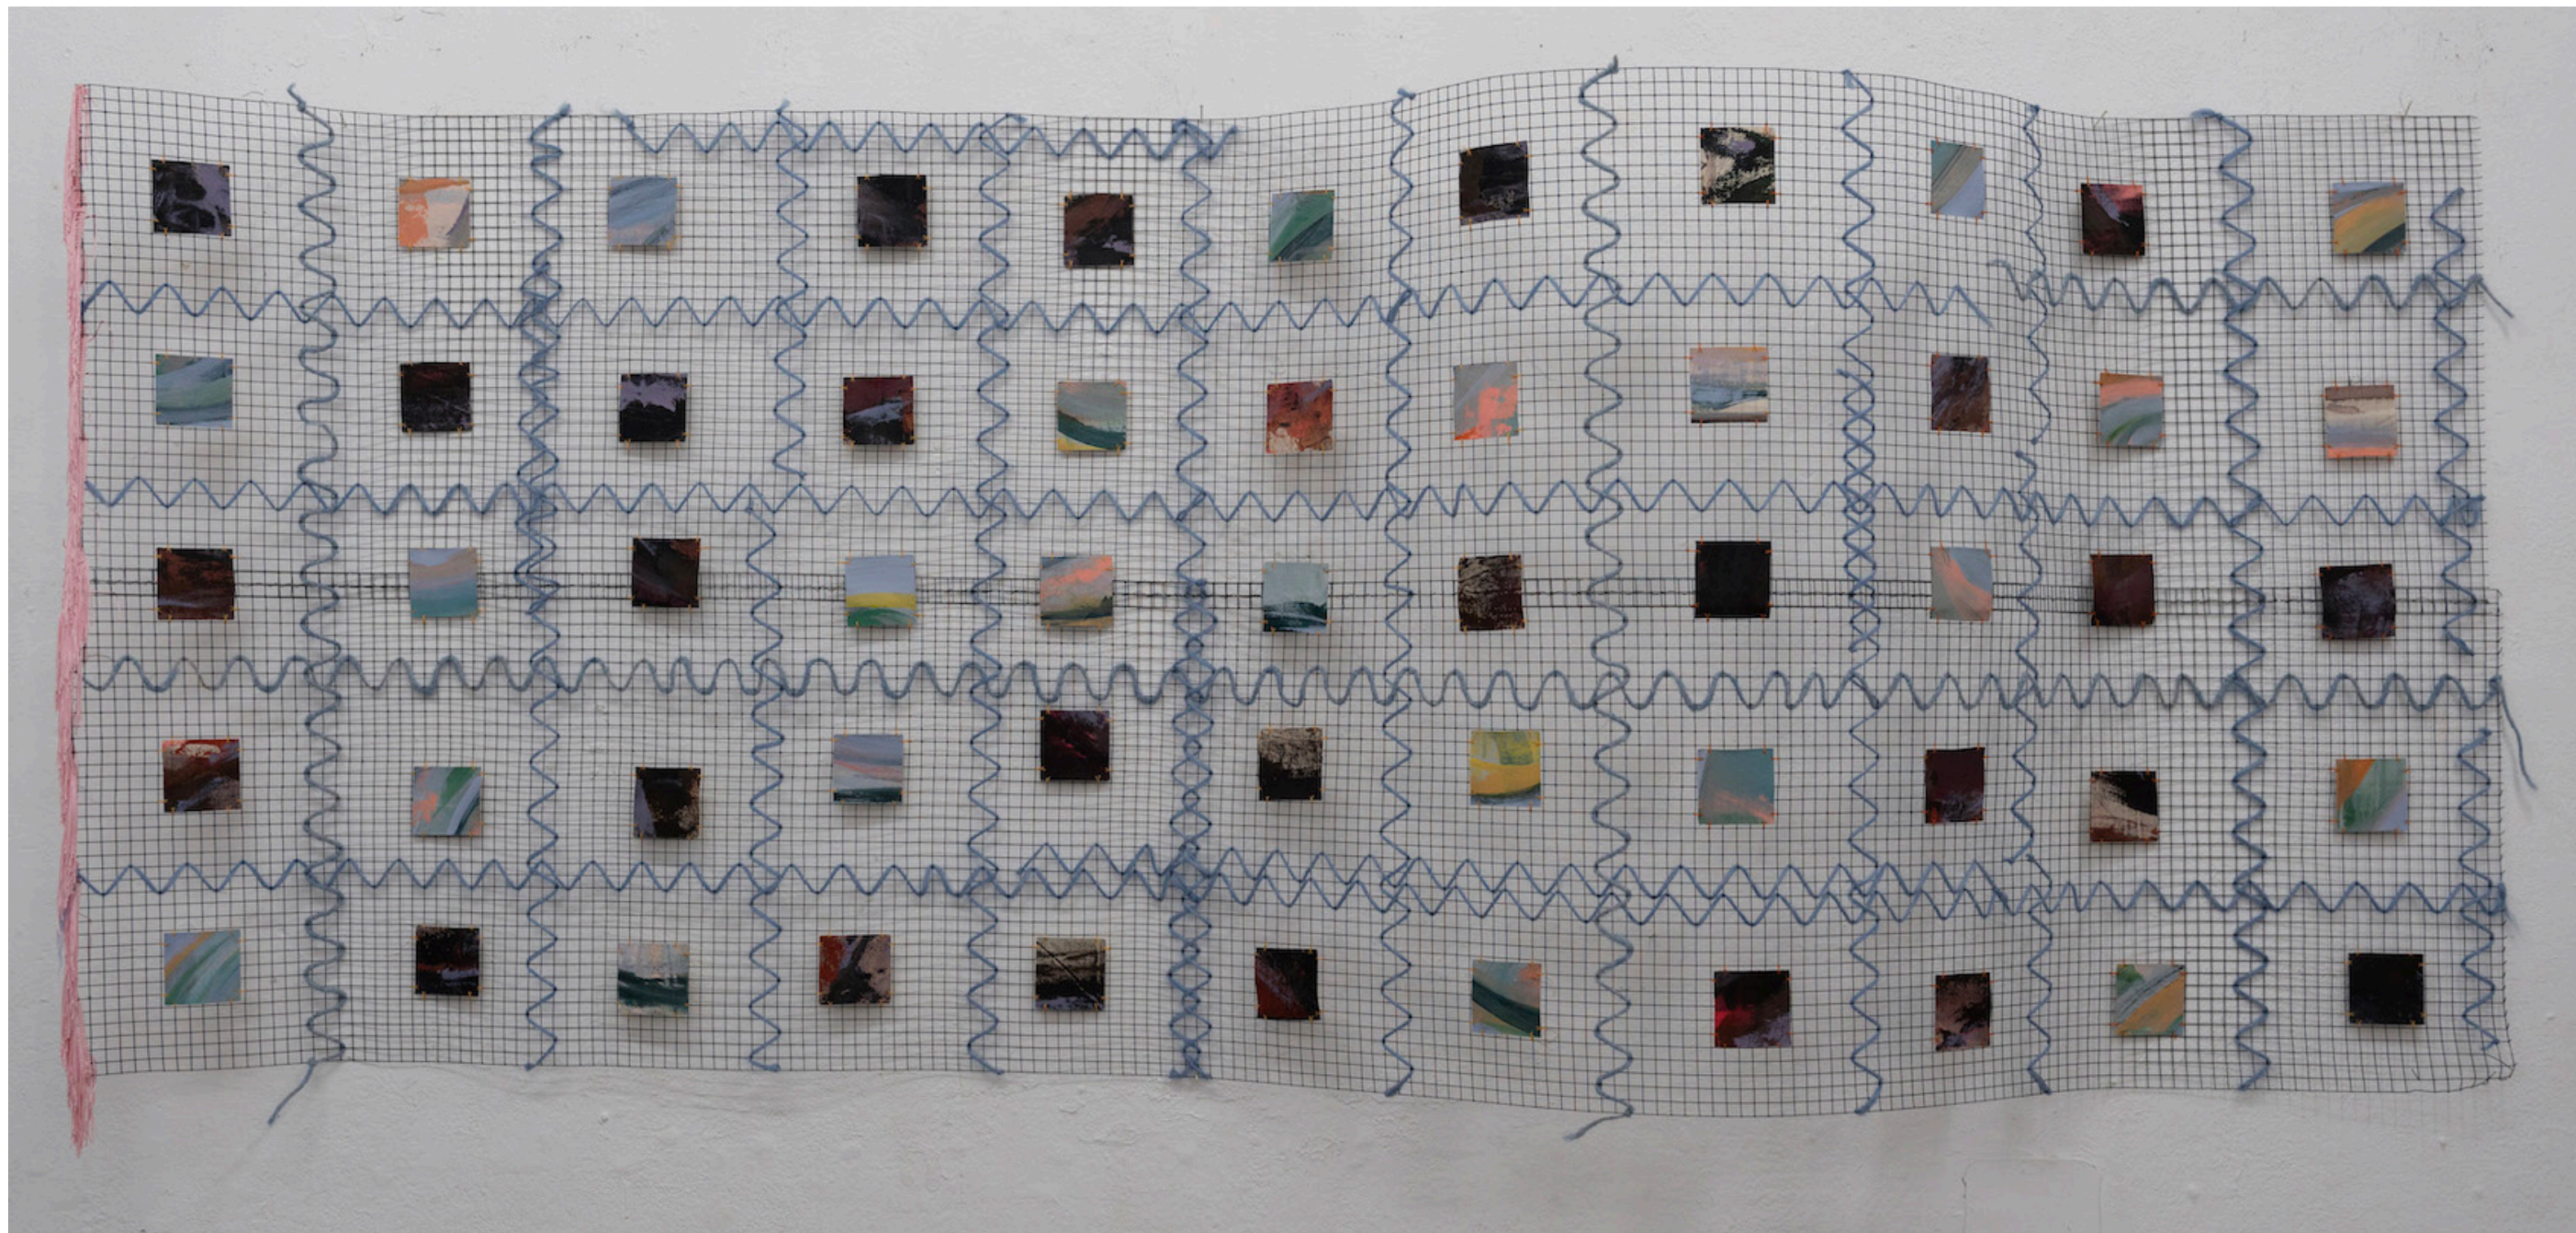

Bryn's weavings are built on a metal grid structure. She describes the grid both as a constraint and as a framework that allows creativity to flow. With fabric, wire, or a needle and thread, she delicately sews rhythmic and textured landscapes. Her use of unexpected and disparate materials mesh into a harmonious fabric reflecting the interconnection of all things.

Bryn's previous body of work analyzes her journey of moving from New Orleans, USA to Berlin, Germany. She weaves together narratives of home with insights gained from her new environment. Guided by lessons Bryn learned while living in New Orleans, her work ultimately examines a search for finding belonging within a foreign city.

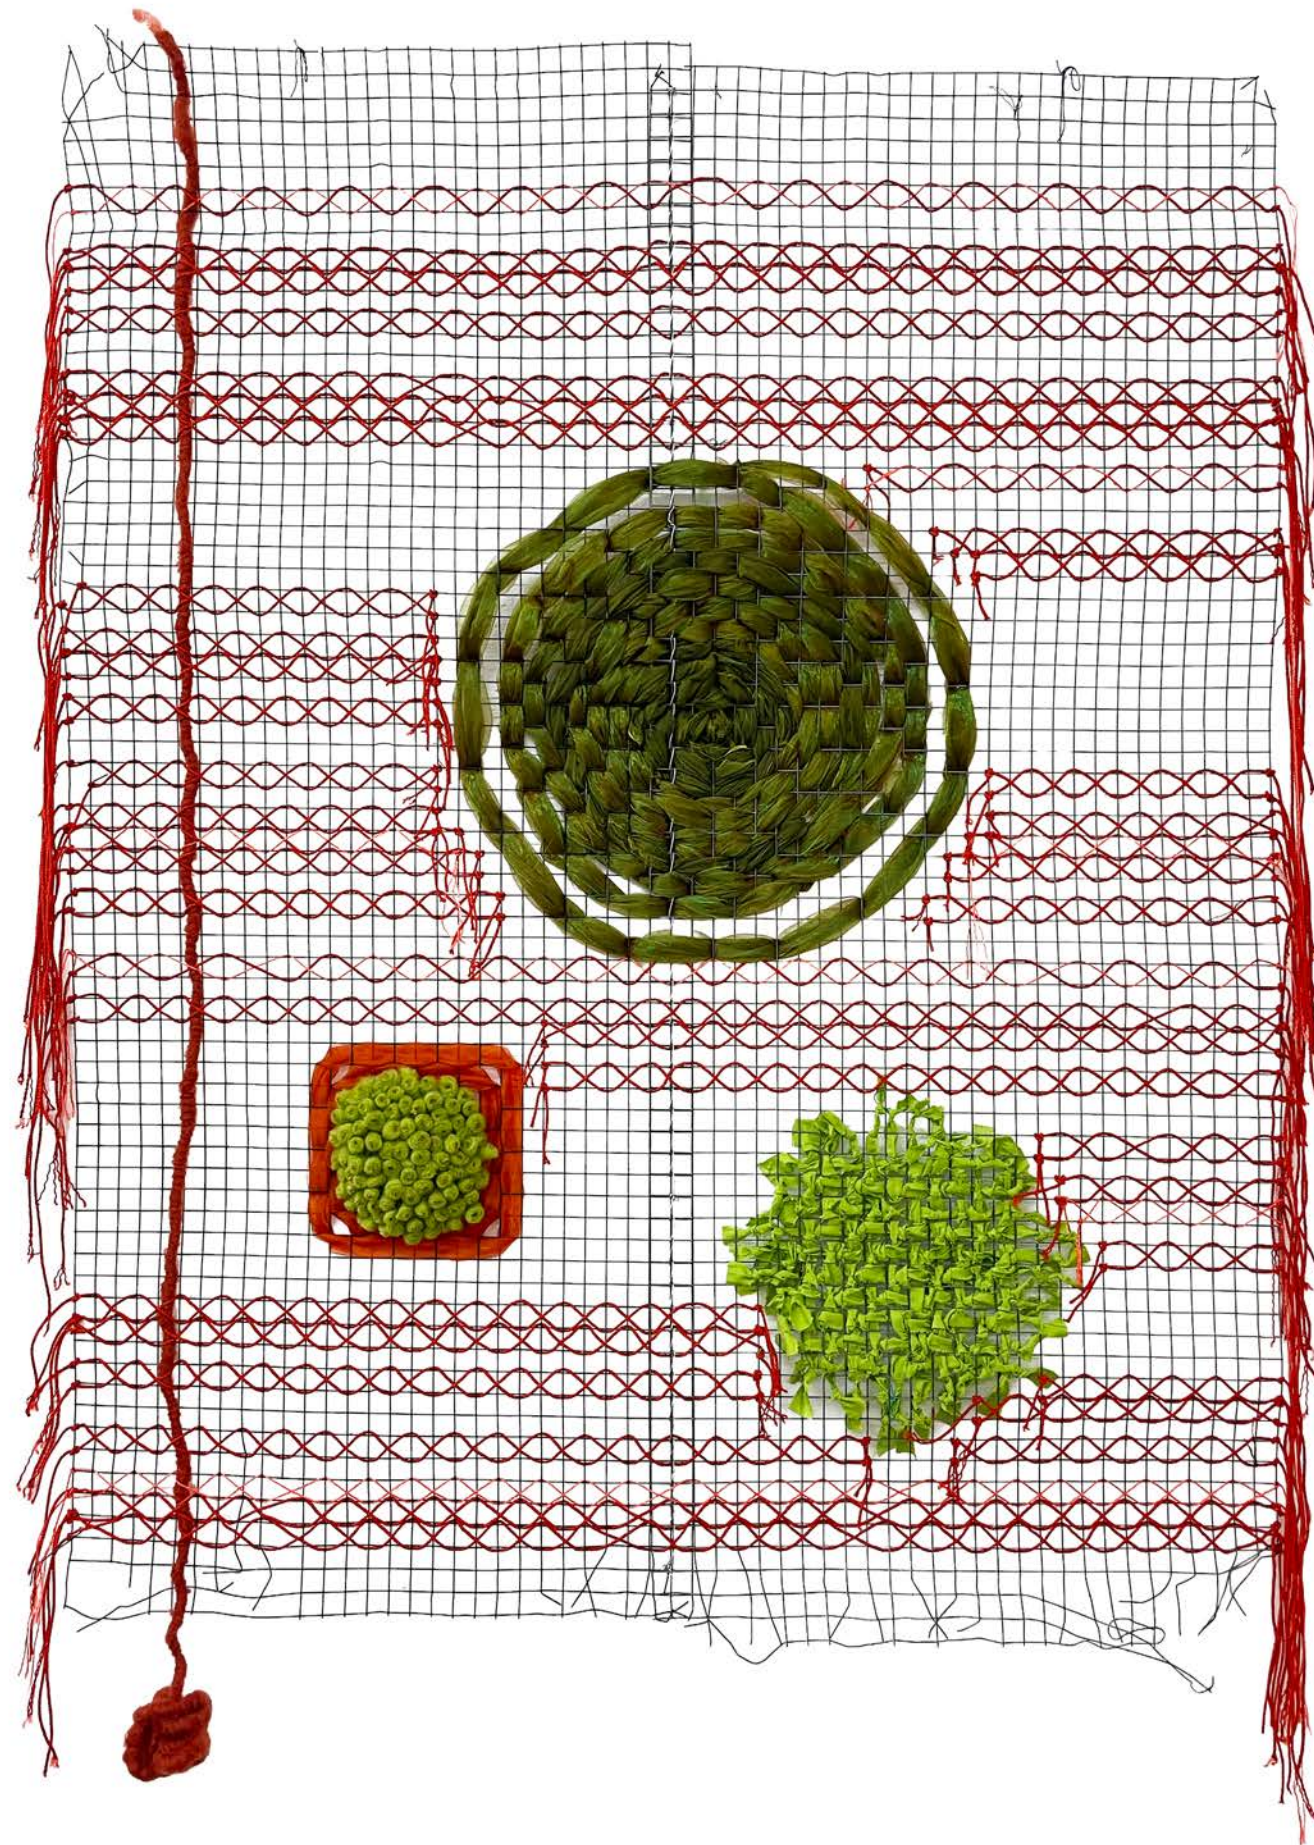

Bryn is now continuing to explore the possibilities for her unique material technique to be applied for design and architectural purposes. Inspired by traditional practices of quilting and weaving, Bryn honors historically feminized crafts with a refreshing and contemporary perspective.
